Although Elizabeth Betancourt lost in the special election in November, she’s running again for the same office in the March 3rd, 2020 primary election. Continuing our support for this great candidate, we intend to use all we’ve learned from our efforts in the recent election, and to keep building on improvements from past elections for this office.

Let’s look at the numbers. First, in November 2019, Elizabeth received 5,018 (46%) votes compared to Meghan Dahle at 5,982 (54%). Although we thought 5,000 votes might be enough to win in our county, the turnout was a bit better than we anticipated at 40%, so 6,000 would have been a better estimate for winning.

By contrast, the special election primary held on August 27 had a 35% turnout with Elizabeth receiving 3,763 votes (40% of the total). Elizabeth increased her votes by 1,255 from the August election and went from 40% of the total vote to 46% - a 6% increase! And in the August primary, the Republican candidates received 5,651 of the votes (combined), and only increased by 331 votes in November - going from 60% of the total vote down to 54%.

So all the phone calls and postcards made a big difference in getting out the vote! We’re moving in the right direction. It’s also interesting to look at the trends in the Assembly races over the past five elections. The table below provides the percent of the vote received by the Democratic Assembly candidate in the past. The 2019 election had the highest percentage for a Democratic candidate in the last five elections – nice work everyone!

SISKIYOU DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Wednesday, December 11, 2019: Best Western, Mt. Shasta

Meetings begin at 6pm, and all are welcome to attend.

In This Issue

Still guided by the Denney campaign’s informal poll, we’re moving on to campaign finance reform. We link that seemingly impossible goal to the vital importance of the vote, of grassroots action, and of recent successes in the Assembly election (above).

Then we move to the malign influence of dark money, our Congressional candidates’ positions, and the small but mighty weapons we can all bring to our fight against the daily corruption of our democracy.
You know, now, you know, with the advantage of hindsight, you're going to think that I'm incredibly naive, but I couldn't imagine all of the things that have happened over the last six or seven months. I just couldn't imagine it. — From the deposition of Marie Yovanovitch, ousted US Ambassador to Ukraine

They say Trump is making Russia great. That’s basically accurate. The chaos brought by Trump into the American system of government is weakening the United States. ... And that’s why we love him... The more problems they have, the better it is for us. —Karen Shakhnazarov, CEO of Mosfilm Studio and a prominent fixture on Russian state television.

And I can tell you I have not found much hope in politicians and corporations. It is the people who are now our greatest source of hope. —Greta Thunberg, climate activist

From geopolitical criminality (extortion, bribery, the giving and receiving of illegal foreign campaign contributions); to massive self-dealing, statehouse gerrymandering, abusing free speech to incite violence; to hometown shenanigans (like tax evasion, or breaking up a family farm in order to maximize federal subsidies), the army of corrupt actors we find on all sides can seem overwhelming. Combine that with Citizens United and engines of hate speech and propaganda like Facebook, Twitter, talk radio, and Primetime Fox, and you have a truly formidable adversary for any citizen trying to do the right thing.

So maybe it’s not surprising that the hundreds of Democrats now engaged in Siskiyou County grassroots organizing have met many disaffected citizens who rarely use, or have given up, their most important small weapon: the vote. “The whole thing is a mess, I don’t want to be involved.” “I don’t do politics.” “I just want to get on with my life.” These are the kinds of things volunteers hear, even from registered Democrats. And then there’s: “I don’t know who to believe, so I don’t believe anybody.” How are we supposed to respond to that? Here are some ideas:

We can deploy two other powerful weapons: information and resistance. As Bill Moyers recently put it, “Voting is easy, democracy is hard. Democracy is what happens between elections.” He went on to say that what happens between elections is education of self and others, and resisting what he calls the three false muses: propaganda, sentimentality, and degradation. Resisting a cynical, dark view that we all take pleasure in hate, and want above all to be dominated. Resisting disinformation, and the spin that lies are “messaging,” that politics is a violent game best played by strong men, and that criminal behavior and gangster-speak are just part of the “brand.”

But most of all, citizens can recognize and support candidates with integrity, like Audrey Denney. In the short term Audrey has pledged to run a campaign free from corporate and PAC donations. But knowing that this puts a huge burden on the average citizen, she’s thinking long-term as well. She supports efforts to overturn Citizens United, give tax credits to small donors, and to explore public campaign financing initiatives like Seattle’s Democracy Voucher Program. She supports grassroots organizing across CA-D1, generously sharing her time and energy. And on the campaign trail, she models hard work, respectful resistance, and tireless truth-telling. She knows that every small vote makes us all stronger, and that only together can we restore our democracy. For a short Audrey video, and more from Moyers on campaign finance reform, see:

In Siskiyou County we are faced with the question: How do we, as Democrats, win elections? This is particularly difficult with low turnout (only 40% in the last special election) or apathy (“I don’t want to be involved” or “My vote doesn’t matter”). In Groundbreakers: How Obama’s 2.2 Million Volunteers Transformed Campaigning in America, we learn that the strength of Obama’s campaign “came from unpaid local citizens who took responsibility for organizing their own neighborhoods – months, even years, before the election.” And he won.

So what is grassroots organizing? Here’s one definition: “A grassroots movement is one which uses the people in a given district, region, or community as the basis for a political or economic movement. Grassroots movements and organizations use collective action from the local level to effect change at the local, regional, national, or international level.” https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Grassroots

In rural areas like Siskiyou County, where media (newspaper and television) play a very minor role in campaigning, it will be our own personal contacts that will make a difference. We’re developing a group of precinct leaders who are working with their neighbors, encouraging them to become involved in elections by helping with canvassing, postcard writing, phone calling and other activities to support our candidates. Winning elections will take all of us working within our local neighborhoods, talking to voters individually about their concerns, and encouraging them to vote.

Believe it: YOU can make a difference! We’ve made a great start. We’ve significantly increased the votes for Democratic candidates in the past few elections with our grassroots efforts, and we’ve only just begun! So when you have even a little time, help in a campaign. It’s fun, and you’ll meet all sorts of wonderful people. Attend one of our Grassroots Committee meetings (1st and 2nd Tuesdays of each month) to find out more. Everyone welcome!

Meantime, why not start here? Join in the Fort Jones Christmas Parade with Audrey Denney and Elizabeth Betancourt. Bring your friends, march with these great candidates, and show what Democrats can do when we stick together. There’ll be cider and snacks at City Hall, hosted by the Democratic Central Committee. Big Fun!
The 2010 Supreme Court decision on Citizens United paved the road to unlimited amounts of money from unknowable sources influencing our elections. As the Washington Post has reported, a whopping 6.5 billion dollars was spent on the 2016 election alone. This included expenditures by “campaigns, party committees, and outside sources.” Overall, the amount of money individuals, non-profits, and corporations spend to help tip the scales in favor of their particular political convictions is staggering. As the Post pointed out, for the cost of the 2016 election the lead pipes in Flint, Michigan could have been fixed 30 times over. Infrastructure, crumbling schools, action on climate—you name it.

Even though the FEC regulates the “hard money” that flows directly to candidates, it doesn’t stop them from accepting contributions from PACs. This gives corporate interests inordinate power. For instance, PG&E’s PAC money was accepted by many California candidates, even after the company was found guilty of sparking multiple wildfires, including the Camp Fire that destroyed the town of Paradise. It doesn’t take much thought to guess what PG&E lobbyists might want from these members, and what they’d be inclined to give.

But there is another group of political funders that don’t have to disclose their donors at all: political nonprofits, or 501(c)s. It is these organizations that are the source of dark money. And since Super PACs can take contributions from these ideological groups, it makes PAC disclosures appear like a mere pretense. While all political parties accept dark money, no one comes close to the Koch Industries’ network of far-right non-profits, among them the infamous Americans for Prosperity. See this infographic from OpenSecrets for general information, and for all things Koch, Jane Mayer’s Dark Money.

So where is Doug LaMalfa in all this? In a recent debate he insisted he doesn’t take corporate contributions. While it’s technically true that corporations can’t donate directly to a candidate, what he didn’t say was that they can, and do, donate to campaign committees and Super PACs, from which he draws freely. Among those is PG&E. LaMalfa, whose district includes Paradise, was among those 44 members of Congress from California who accepted donations from the PG&E PAC. He’s also funded by Americans for Prosperity.

Regarding campaign finance reform, LaMalfa hasn’t said much. But true to form, he recently shared an attack ad on his Facebook page that likened public financing of elections to “government interference” and a political “slush fund.” This year he voted against a bill requiring campaigns to notify the FBI if a foreign government offers them assistance. And in many other ways LaMalfa has demonstrated that he isn’t interested in bringing integrity back to our democratic process. Whether it’s exploiting the “499 loophole” that allows incumbents to mail flyers using taxpayer’s money right before an election, trying to falsely link his opponent for State Assembly, Barbara McIver, to pornographer Larry Flynt in flyers and radio ads, or distributing mailers with a doctored image of Audrey Denney signing a pledge of loyalty to Nancy Pelosi—when it comes to dirty tricks, LaMalfa doesn’t hold back. Let’s send this Kocher back to the rice farm.

Winter is coming. Time to grab some hot cider, pull the chair in front of the fire, and dig into that stack of books and list of podcasts that’s waited all summer.

RESOURCES OF THE MONTH

Groundbreakers: How Obama’s 2.2 Million Volunteers Transformed Campaigning in America
by Elizibeth McKenna and Hahrie Han, Oxford University Press, 2014
The Obama campaign, as never before, engaged citizens in the work of practicing democracy. The multi-year, multi-billion dollar operation elected the nation’s first black president, raised and spent more money than any other election effort in history, and built the most sophisticated voter targeting technology ever. This book describes how.

Blowout by Rachel Maddow, Crown Publishing, 2019
The legendary TV news host takes on the international corruption resulting from global dominance by the petro-chemical industry. The subtitle says it all: Corrupted Democracy, Rogue State Russia, and the Richest, Most Destructive Industry on Earth.

Brennan Center for Justice
The Brennan Center is a nonpartisan law and policy institute, “striving to uphold the values of democracy.” Founded in 1995 by law clerks of Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., it combines in-depth policy development and legal advocacy aimed at crafting and advancing a “transformative reform agenda — solutions that aim to make American democracy work for all.”

Dark Money by Jane Mayer, Doubleday, 2016
Focused heavily on Koch brothers Charles and David, this is the book on how undisclosed and hidden, even illegal, money moves through our politics. The goal of the political “investors” profiled here is to undermine democracy, in order to establish a system of governance even arch-conservative William F. Buckley dubbed “Anarcho-Totalitarianism.” A must read.

21 Lessons for the 21st Century by Yuval Noah Harari, Spiegel and Grau, 2018
A probing and visionary investigation into today’s most urgent issues, as we move into the uncharted territory of the future. How do computers and robots change the meaning of being human? How do we deal with the epidemic of fake news? Are nations and religions still relevant? What should we teach our children? Harari addresses the challenge of navigating life in the face of constant and disorienting change, and raises the important questions we need to ask ourselves in order to survive.

MARCH IN THE FORT JONES PARADE!
Audrey Denney and Elizabeth Betancourt will be there!

Meet at the Fort Jones Elementary School at 12:30pm to line up for the parade. Join us after the parade for coffee, hot chocolate and treats at the Fort Jones Community Center, 11960 East St. Everyone is welcome to the parade and reception - bring your friends and family!
